

Integrated Graduate Studies Program

The Integrated Graduate Studies (IGS) program is intended for highly motivated undergraduate students who wish to complete the academic requirements of both a B.A. and M.A. degree in Anthropology. Interested students who fulfill the college requirements for the IGS program (see <http://www.case.edu/provost/ugstudies/IGS.htm>) must apply to the Anthropology graduate program by the spring semester of their junior year. Details on applying to the graduate program can be found at: <http://www.case.edu/artsci/anth/gradprograms.html>.

It is possible to obtain the M.A. degree simultaneously with, or shortly after, completion of the B.A. degree because courses taken during your senior year can be applied towards the completion of the requirements for both degrees. Course schedules must of course be constructed so that the courses taken during your senior year are appropriate for both degrees. The B.A. degree will be awarded upon meeting all requirements for a baccalaureate degree, which should occur by the end of your senior year. The M.A. degree will be awarded after successfully completing 27 graduate credit hours and 'passing' the comprehensive examination. For more details on the requirements for an M.A. in Anthropology see: <http://www.case.edu/artsci/anth/reqforma.html>.
