One of the oldest law schools in the country, Case Western Reserve University School of Law is a leader in preparing students to serve in the practice of law and public service.

The law school’s faculty is among the best in the nation. They are distinguished in their scholarship and for their excellence as educators and mentors. They continue to engage in groundbreaking research, and their scholastic endeavors are recognized throughout the country. School of Law students receive a legal education that combines theory with practice and are selected from a competitive national pool. The law school community continues to advance scholarship and learning, to support the legal profession, and to prepare excellent lawyers.
Points of Pride

> The School of Law is among the first in the country to create the CaseArc Integrated Lawyering Skills Program. CaseArc merges the teaching of legal theory and policy with legal doctrine and lawyering skills. This unique program combines traditional classroom methods with experiential learning to ensure that every law student learns the fundamental skills of effective lawyering.

> In addition to offering seven concentrations in the curriculum, the School of Law also offers nine dual degree and certificate programs with the graduate departments and professional schools at the university. These allow full-time students to combine their legal education with other studies, leading to both a Juris Doctor (JD) and a second graduate degree.

> School of Law faculty were the first in the nation to establish an International Tribunal Externship Program. Students have the opportunity to undertake a semester-long internship at one of the five international criminal tribunals. More Case Western Reserve University law students have interned at these tribunals than from any other law school.

> The Milton A. Kramer Law Clinic Center is an in-house, real-client clinic that provides legal services to members of the community unable to afford legal counsel. Third-year students act as the primary legal counsel for clients through yearlong clinics.
